Two LUU Sabbatical posts filled without a poll

by Andrew Harrison

Two candidates in LUU's sabbatical elections have won posts on next year's Union executive without a vote being cast, after their opponents withdrew before polling.

Student trustee Nicola Bailey and third year zoologist Ian Baird were earlier in week named by the union's election committee as next year's Education Secretary and Financial Affairs Secretary respectively. Each had not opposed by any other candidates, and under the Union's constitution nominations can only be reopened once they have closed.

Nicola Bailey says she is disappointed that her opponent — fellow Leeches club member and Leeds student columnist Alex Entwistle — would pull it off at the race for the Education portfolio, but she thinks there was no way Entwistle in the decision. "I did not set anything myself," she said. "After Chris did not hold in selection meetings for sabbatical elections 60 years, and have not even holding Club initiatives."

However I feel I am the best person for the job and that I would have won anyway.

• Nicola Bailey "Didn't arrange anything"

• Anne Baird "No point in sleeping pictures: Martin Ziegler"

Hopefully this will prove to be the last year in which candidates in LUU's sabbatical elections are returned to their posts without having to earn the electorate at least a little. Yesterday's AGM may have seen to that (see page 10).

My mother has said a candidate may believe his or herself to be — and surely that is a matter for students to decide anyway — there is no real defence for sidestepping the voters as one's first option as their representative.

And that applies to current members of Exec as well as the newly elected. The argument that "student equity" is known for the lack of candidates is spurious too. How else can students be involved in their own Union but by voting, genuine politicking and election campaigning? Maybe the "sleeping" risk is expedient and comfortable but with the best will in the world it can never, ever be democratic. The kind of electoral sleight-of-hand is just a part of what puts students off their Union. It should stop right now.

Furious students picket Anderton

• James Anderton — "Smoked" by the hand of Chris P. Anthony "Bad Attitude" Keavey

by Debbie Harris

A surprise visit by controversial Leeches Club Constable, James Anderton to Leeds University on Tuesday was met by an angry group of more than fifty pickets.

The demonstration was protesting against his strong personal, and often considered offensive, views. Anderton was ordered to pass the picketers and subjected only verbal abuse.

Once inside the Rupert Beckwith Lecture Theatre the two side doors were locked and guard-duty officers. Though his arrival was quiet, when asked about his attitude towards homosexuals in the context of his belief in people's freedom he was disappointed in the way he was treated. He was extremely explicit in his abhorrence of the "gay national way" in which homosexuality manifests itself.

Anderton's speech was kept quiet by the Leeches Club, who arranged the meeting, until the last possible moment, and only Leeches members were allowed to attend. His speech consisted of an almost biographical account of his thirty six years in the police force but it wasn't until the meeting was opened up for questions that the first Chief Inspectors began to rise. Full exclusive interview with James Anderton in next week's edition of Leeches Club.

CVCP asks Baker for more cash

University Vice Chancellors added extra weight to the ACU's pay claim this week, by asking the government for an extra $183 million over the next two years. The money could be used to provide a pay settlement of about 8%.

The Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals asked Mr Kenneth Baker, the Education Secretary, for an extra $44 million in 1989-90 and $179 million in 1990-1.

The money would not be used for an across the board increase, but would be targeted so as to reward outstanding performance and to raise salaries where staff are in short supply.

The CVCP's action appears to align the ACU's grievance, that a fall in real salaries was leading to problems of recruiting and retaining staff. In their statement, the Vice-Chancellors claim that lecturers' salaries had fallen by 20% in comparison with similar occupations, and that a recent survey showed 80% of professional posts were vacant, as were 10% of lectureships.

John Chatter, the ACU Vice President, believed there was more "a glimmer of hope for a solution. However the ACU wants to see the board to ensure salaries are not frozen. They also see the impact for $183 million as though it was an inappropriately modest

Polys face crisis over financial control

by Debbie Harris

Thirty-five polytechnics and colleges are facing crisis over their financial controls. April 1 is the date they receive their independence from local authorities, but more than a quarter will be inadequately prepared.

Initially it was thought that some 100,000 staff would be given time by the Education Secretary, Robert Art. However a review by accountants Peat, Marwick, Mainstock, has shown the problems to be more widespread.

Though the Polytechnic Central Funding Council have set up a task force to assist the institutions which have failed to secure their financial controls, Barry Blackwood, LPSU President, has not been told before that Leeds is a crisis case.

Poly Blaze causes extensive damage

Damage put at about $100,000 was caused by fire which broke out at the Polytechnic last weekend.

Firemen battled with a blaze in flared buildings in Queens Square more than three weeks ago, though preventing the fire from spreading from the basement management department where it began, they could not save one computer equipment which was badly damaged by smoke.

Although the exact cause is still being investigated there is a suspicion that burglars may have started the fire, which quickly spread through the department, penetrating ceilings and floors.

Chris Clarke, the fireman leading the operation from Kirokital Firestation, said, "The shell with remains but the whole of the inside of one of the buildings will have to be rebuilt. I would estimate that half of it was destroyed. The other side, which housed the computer equipment was badly smoke damaged."

"Jimmy's" fire death leads to arrest

by Patrick Johnson

A 71 year old man died last Saturday morning when fire broke out in the Care of the Elderly department at St James' Hospital.

A 18 year old man, Michael Clarke of Beech Mount, Glaston, appeared in Leeds Magistrates Court last Monday morning charged with arson and with theft from a car. He was remanded in custody for a week. The fire at the hospital, which appears in the television series Emmerdale, was quickly brought under control by firemen and most patients were moved due to the leanness of staff. The man who died had been suffering from leg ulcers and was unable to escape from the fire.

LUU Plans Anti-Loans 'Action Week'

erds University Union has announced its event in conjunction with the LUU's "Week of Action", against the implementation of loans. The proposed events, from the 11-17 February, include daily talks on loans in the Riley hall and a "Day of Action", on Tuesday 14 February.

Key speakers are Diana Smith, General Secretary of the AUE, talking on "Loans and the Understanding of Education" and the Vice-Chancellor, Sir Edward Whelan, Chair of the Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals, who will talk on "Loans and the Supply of Students". Both speakers are highly known at the here-front of the debate on the AUE's campaign regarding action.

The "Day of Action" is held to be a key event. The Union have called for its members to boycott lectures to support the day's events, and the action is a whole. These events include a rally and the North East Regional Demonstration. Dave Hargreaves, the Union's General Secretary stated, "We are calling for our members to give up one day of their further education to save that of others. Should the proposals become law, people will lose the whole of their education."

To co-ordinate with this action, Dave Hargreaves, and LUU Education Secretary, Terry Bryant, will be visiting Halls of Residence between the 9-17 February debating loans as a lead up to the National Demonstration in London on the 25th. Hargreaves concluded, "This issue can be won, and it is up to the people in further education to win it."

BMA warns that medics will suffer most

by Jackie Wright

The British Medical Association this week warned that medical students will be hardest hit by the proposed loan scheme.

In response to the Government's White Paper the BMA, in a letter to the Health Secretary, said that a junior doctor would be expected to spend a third of his first year in hospital, a third in a general practice and a third in a hospital. The BMA said that a junior doctor would have to repay £2,000 (meaning 2% interest) for the first £10,000 of the loan.

of students having to borrow more and share the loan to meet living costs. A London-based doctor stated would face even higher costs. Due to the high cost of living, the cost of housing (rent) and the introduction of this plan, many potential medical students will be deterred from studying in one of the 10 London medical schools," says the BMA. It believes that disillusionment amongst junior doctors with the prospect of large outstanding debts, and it wants the Government to give extra funding to medical schools to cover last year's losses.

Leeds near to cup success

FA Cup 4th Round
Nottingham Forest 2
Leeds United 0

Leeds fans reaction to this game, to the disappointed observation, was, on the face of it, laughable. "What's it like to be outclassed?" is not a statement that the scoreline suggests, yet watching the game, the statement about the supposed team of the moment is not as ludicrous as it first seems.

Forest had a team packed with players of international reputation. But Set Bon, Pearce, Hodge, Carr, White and Southey were matched by Day, Seaden, Blake, Rafter, Sheridan and Reid.

The second highest attendance at the weekend match of Sherborne produced a very high crowd of spectators.

200th appearance in a Leeds first team shirt.

Forest went ahead in the second minute, but mid before Leeds had the ball in the net for the only time. Reid's challenge on Irvine was shattered. The first Forest goal should come from a free kick being driven low into the United penalty area, and Chapman hitting the ball side of Murray Day.

Leeds could have given up there and then, as GPR and Aston Villa had done before, going down 0-2 and 0-3, but they continued with their intent and played as if nothing had happened.

With nine thousand supporters, a coachload from the Leeds University supporters club among them, cheerleaders behind the team, Sherborne had a shell tipped over in the twentieth minute. Minutes later Blake headed wide after a series of runners.

Leeds' best chance fell to Peter Harris in the 60th minute. He unfortunately mis-kicked from eight yards, and the deserved equaliser just did not come. Reid, Milner and Adams all had chances to get the vital goal but nothing came of them.

In the end, justice was not done, and late in injury time, with Leeds pushing forward, Forest switched play and Parker ran to leave the left and scored a vital second goal.

If Leeds can reproduce this type of form against the team currently providing the second division, they will certainly be promotion contenders at the end of the season.

Dolan sacked as Bradford manager

It is with sad regret that we notice the passing of Terry Dolan, manager of Bradford.

Dolan, who took Bradford to the top of the league, had just been sacked by the club after a long period of ill health.

He had been in the club since 1980, and had been in the club since 1980, and had been in the club since 1980.

The Racists on their way out

Leeds United Fans Against Racism are continuing their campaign to make Leeds United's Elland Road ground a truly and racist-free place for the people to enjoy football.

The Saturday, the group will be holding the Leeds United against Sunderland match, handing out papers to the fans, and a leaflet detailing the club's policy on racism, and the club's policy on racism.

The group, at the start of this season, released a leaflet with a picture of Reverend Graham, the club's former captain, with the two new signings, Vane Hilson and Neil Blain.

The two players, both black, have become firm favourites with the fans, and this, along with the anti-racist campaign, has gone a long way in producing the good feeling at the club at the moment.

Leeds United, in times past, had one of the finest black players to grace the English game, Paul Beatty. Since then, however, apart from a brief flirtation with Terry Connor, none at Park Avenue, the Leeds club has been an all white side.

This has caused certain of the notorious 'Service Crew' to write in to the Nation National Front paper, 'Blackdog', praising the Leeds United team for being all white and proud of it. They obviously left that to the British, people need to be all white and not to have any black friends.

Leeds has not now as much racist chanting as they used to have, but the unbecoming of looking is still there. At a recent game, a Leeds fan was overheard shouting 'Get the nigger bastard' to Neil United throughout the early eighties.

With this new spirit at Leeds United, there has been a lessening of the violence and boogaloes which has followed Leeds throughout the same years. Leeds have only been involved in one incident of trouble this year, as much as any other team in the country. There has not been the mass pitch invasions and battles for which Leeds is famous for.

Along with this trouble free part of Leeds history, the club has prospered. Credits are up by as much as six thousand in two years ago, and they are now one of the seven best supported teams in the country. Not had for team currently division two.

Of all the clubs in the country, Millwall must now have the worst, on the racism would have least reputation. With at least four incidents of boogaloes this year alone, the fans that had and cheered against Liverpool's John Barnes, the team must be all their supporters are being the side down.

Leeds United's spirit in the 90s did a lot to the racism, giving them credibility. The race does little if anything to depict the image of the N.F. as misjudged people who have a respect for opinion who just go to the top for it.

They are responsible connection with violence, but never with dignity of campaigns where to be as described without and so many poor in society do not feel at the racism are doing it.

The Front are still not found outside the ground peddling their lies and racist hatred. It is while Leeds United's spirit in the 90s did a lot to the racism, giving them credibility. The race does little if anything to depict the image of the N.F. as misjudged people who have a respect for opinion who just go to the top for it.

The proposal to restore Headingley's automatic right to a Test Match in 1991 has once more highlighted the problems of the groundman Keith Boyce. It's a natural criticism over the quality of the wickets at the home of Yorkshire cricket almost from the day he took over the job; but few seem to have tried to understand the extent of his difficulties, hence I suggested we had a chat. He was delighted to oblige.

When Keith arrived at Headingley from Middlesex in 1978, he had a high reputation as a groundman; but he quickly realised he had problems.

"Preparing a cricket pitch is a simple thing; it just means getting a good soil, and rolling it to make sure it's flat, but I soon discovered that the wicket wasn't all it was cracked up to be. It was a very bad cricket square with poor standard wickets. I'd inherited a problem of cracking."

Keith based his belief on how to counter the problem, quite logically, on past experience, and assumed that a strong root growth to bind the soil was the answer; but regular criticism by sections of the media, players and umpires suggested the solution lay elsewhere.

I got to the stage where criticism was coming when it seemed thoroughly unjustified. In 1980 England made their highest score against Australia at Headingley — 533 — Australia replied with scores of over 300 in both innings and England won after tea on the final day, the ideal scenario as far as a groundman is concerned. Yet still the talk was about uneven bounces, cracking and so forth. Boyce observed of this situation that no matter what, "I was going to get bloody criticism."

"For good or ill, to accept criticism. Pressmen have to tell newspapers and Headingley is always a story, but I was used. They'd criticise but they wouldn't try to understand. And yes, some of the criticism did start to hurt and hurt badly."

The media raves in 1986. Prior to the Test Match both the Test and County Cricket Board inspectors of pitches and Colin Cowdrie expressed the belief that Keith had got it right, and on the second morning Mike Gatting called for the light roller in the belief that the wicket would do nothing, as had been the case all morning. Yet the ball began to swing and Henry and Madsen laid down the England bat-

"I felt I'd done everything. I didn't know where to turn." Keith tried to get away with a one-day match on the same wicket, but his hope backfired and the contest became a farce. His response was to react to umpire Jackie Durbushaw's criticism by telling him he "knew" the wicket; to the authorities at Leeds, on entering it was dug up. The results proved a shock: 3 inches deep the soil included manure and roof. With no firm foundations the top surface was bound to crack.

Short of digging this up, Keith's only other option was to try and compact it. And despite official disapproval, he gradually worked his way up to a 10-ton road roller. The 1986 Test Match vindicated this approach. After lunch on the second day no further wickets fell in the match.

The marks the wickets received for consistency of pace and bounce improved. Keith had succeeded in what he had found a permanent solution: too much of the same heavy rolling would result in ridges forming, he is systematically digging up the old wickets, but I felt with hope for the future. "It might take time," he said. "But Headingley's always a first class Test Match wicket — that's certain."

Inter-mural warning

In the inter-mural leagues some teams are allocating themselves the pitches that they play on, rather than accepting the groundsmen's rules as to where they should play.

See Jackie, at the university sports office, this week that if this

"The teams, namely Club 4, Geography and Motors, will be thrown out of the league if this continues," he said.

Nominations are also now open for the eleven-a-side cricket competition which will take place in the summer term.

The Woodhouson trophy is played every year, and the closing date for entering is Friday 3rd March.

If you have a team who wishes to enter the league competition, go to the sports office and see Sue Jackson now.

Boat Theft

Leeds University Boat Club's boat house at Swillington was broken into early last week.

The boat house, which is shared with Garsketh school, was entered by some people and a boat was wrecked and set off down the street. This did not belong to the university boat club.

No Leeds boats were damaged but the trouble is merely part of a larger problem of where the boat club should be housed.

Space is needed at York Road. Archibald's bridge School, but that could not be at any time. The club also used space at a boat house at Roundhay Park, but since then, the place has been turned into a cafe. The club also has permission to row on the River Aire, but with no boat house in Leeds it is difficult to gain access.

There have been several plans to find new premises for the boat club, but most have not been adequate. Hopefully in the future something will be found.

3rd's victory

By Robin Perrie

Leeds 3rd XI

Lancaster is always the theatre where the pitch is heavier than the margin of Leeds' victory.

The soil water was more than the first morning's rain helped the pitch as much as in previous years however, but it failed to prevent Leeds emphatically returning to winning ways.

The match as a whole was a struggle often and only on both sides had an equal share of the play.

It was Leeds however who had most of the early class of chances.

After 20 minutes Gary Jackson hit for Leeds and although Lancashire continued to exert pressure, the Leeds defence, although not on top form, coped adequately enough.

As the second half progressed Leeds superior bowlers, one to the fore and Lancaster's bowlers gradually dropped.

Leeds finished there, all with a low goal there in ten minutes.

Karen scored his second, Haslam and Ryan got over the cross-runs off, and McEwen scored one in the edge of the box after beating three men.

James kept to second class short in two games and capped a career performance with a spin-scoring save from an edge of the box free kick which appeared to be heading goalwards, with his lively interferences.

JUDOKA January 26th saw the return of the Leeds University judo club annual competition, which due to efficient organisation was completed in record time to allow a full 3 hours in The Little Park before departing for a Chinese.

The Leeds Uni Women's team withdrew the competition to gain a place in the final. However, superb performance from Emma Dear, Katy Falk and Chris Alderton were not enough to get the gold medals.

The Poly team, comprising of Alex McCreight, Ken Barber, Dean Trotter, Dennis and Pollock, put theory into practice to arrive at the semi-finals.

Unfortunately for them the Uni team had also reached this position. The resulting free contests were classic examples of the style and grace for which judo is well known. Four wins from Paul Harrison, Paul Williamson, Neil Calogero and Billy Wheeler produced the victory to carry them through to the final. Their opponents in this last stage were Knottleygate, a local club.

In a hard fought series of fights led by Andy Mason, the Uni lost 4-1 to gain silver.

Express route

ORIENTEERING
by James Laird

After the intense competition of a mile previous week, the toughest arrived to make it to last Sunday's orienteering event, our Burnaby. Here the thick forest and impenetrable bushes made it a complete necessity. Even so the area still provided a challenge, with the large number of controls making advanced route planning and control flow incredibly beneficial.

This showed through in the results with Alan Powell leading the Leeds team in 26 minutes. He was followed by Martin Pether (32 mins), who got lucky and just beat James Laird in under a minute, yet again, Blair was Paul Ripley (27 mins) after a fast improvement from last week, and the Leeds members, Chris Skelton and Andy Nicholas, in on the shorter course again. The latter of whom had a much better run, than last week, due to the absence of Emma Austin who had winged out of competing in this tough area, and therefore was unable to pass on any inaccurate advice. Some other results: Maxine Bousfield 28 mins, Neil Simpson 37 mins. Stage completed.

Quarter Final wins

E.R.I.A. Some B.F.S.A. results from the quarter-finals were played last week, and some are still to be played.

The results are as from men's basketball, where Leeds won 80-45 and play the Polytechnic of Central London in the semi-finals. The ladies' volleyball finals were played last week, and some are still to be played. The results are as from men's basketball, where Leeds won 80-45 and play

Poly respectively. This week in the quarter-finals the Netball 2nd's play Wolves, as do the Rugby 1st's and 2nd's and the men's Volleyball team. In Badminton, Leeds play the City of London Polytechnic.

Leeds Uni in Rugby League final

RUGBY LEAGUE
UCARLA CUP semi-final
Leeds Uni 18 Edge Hill 18
by Andy Minkin

A bright road day set the scene at Huddington as Leeds Uni Rugby League team overcame a spirited Edge Hill side to reach the final of the UCARLA Cup. Indeed it was the college side's determination not to be beaten that made for a nail biting last ten minutes as they clawed their way from being 12-0 down to be within striking distance at 12-8.

Leeds started the match without key men, Keith Sykes and Russell Henery. The result was that Tim Booth came in to the second row, Tim Houghton took over at hooker while captain, Damien Connolly played at stand off for Henery. Dave Brown stepped in to Sykes' position at prop forward. It was Connolly and Henery who combined after just ten minutes to open the scoring with a try. Steve Luty converting.

The rest of the half resulted in a period of stalemate as both defences had a tight grip on any promising attacks that developed.

Edge Hill almost equalised when their scrum half took the ball in midfield, scanned the Leeds defence and sliced through the approaching full back. Tom Davis he elected to kick over him when he probably would have done better by trying to beat him. The following scrabble for the ball resulted in Leeds possession and they were able to clear their line. It was Leeds who finished the half the stronger as Connolly received the ball inside the Edge Hill 25 yard area and after dismantling the defence he created the gap leaving himself enough room to beat the full back and touch down. Steve Luty again adding the goal to make a half time score of 12-0.

The second half started slowly, again the defences were on top as strong tackling prevailed. Leeds failed to capitalise on their first half lead as Edge Hill grew in confidence, added not least by obtaining a large amount of possession as Andy Bell was constantly penalised for leaving the scrum. As a result the Uni were having to tackle when they really should have been running with the ball. Eventually the pressure told as Edge Hill created a two to one scrum on their right hand side and there was nothing the Leeds defence could do as the substitute winger scored in the corner. Inspired by this score Edge Hill scored almost a clean sweep by their scrum after Luty had kicked the ball straight into touch at the restart. Fortunately for Leeds both conversions had failed otherwise the score would have been level going into the last ten minutes of the match. Leeds consolidated as Sean Davidson broke through the defence and from the resulting position the ball was moved out right for Jon Derryshire to touch down and make the game safe. Steve Luty then kicked a magnificent touch line goal just as the referee blew the full time whistle.

This was a far from convincing display by the Uni team but it was heartening to see how resolute the team was, compensating for the injury injuries. Victory in the semi-final was made even sweeter with the news that six members of the club had been called up to train with the Great Britain student Rugby League squad. Those forwarders were Keith Sykes, Russell Henery, Damien Connolly, Sean Davidson, Martin Wilson and Jon McCarthy. Hopefully they will not be the last.

Is this a record?

by Tim Houghton

When being told about the value of freedom in society, as it was satisfying and ironic that the Freedom Association was last week rebuffed in its attempt to stop the BCC (banning from test cricket) those who continue to pollute their trade in South Africa — a victory for freedom if ever there was one.

Years of clearing out mind bogglingly irrelevant rubbish have taken their toll on Norris McWhirter. Instead of 'Island? Come on, Norris! Millions of South Africans are presented from working here so where they want to. If the BCC had forbidden to vote for the ban, it would not just be last players being deprived of earning money from test cricket, but English cricket as a whole. For without test revenue the English cricket scene would be unable to function.

In a sense the MCC has been put over an authoritarian barrel, for English cricket can only survive if it conforms to international opinion. And as the BCC has no jurisdiction over governments, a further link to players already linked to South Africa may be demanded. Chapman has stated that it will defy the BCC ruling and without doubt have been planned for this year. Most forwards can be expected.

English cricket could not withstand another wave of discontent. It is not just a moral question but also one of the future of cricket in this country. This only goes to show that the philosophy freedom of South Africa is doubt misguided.

I went to see Miller's The Crucible at Leeds Playhouse about two years ago. I started giggling, felt uncomfortable, blushed in my seat and went to the toilet three times in the awareness of my own, I kept glancing at my watch thinking what a martyr I was being spending my free time in such an educational pursuit. I was pleased when it was

Two years on, and hearing all this in mind I was cautious about going to the Theatre Group's production. If Leeds Playhouse loved me how could an amateur production succeed?

The Crossroads is a play which needs to be acted well. It is a play which needs to keep its audience's interest. It is a play which needs a sincere, straight-faced cast. It is a play which needs to create an atmosphere of discussion and

Fortunately, the Theatre Group's version of The Gracilaria not only fulfilled these requirements, but

Tonight, every single member of the large fraternity of "laser-bouts" in Leeds had pulled on his sweaty and pale stained Wedding Present t-shirt and squeezed into the claustrophobic confines of the Duchess, only to be rewarded with the sight of two system to pig noises producing a large of feedback and some very tedious minimalist type noises. It was detestable as to who was more uncomfortable; the "band" by wearing such hardware in the humid atmosphere of the audience for having to listen to such shite.

The Screaming Custards arrived and left without even trying to give an impression of originality. If indie pop is dead, this is someone trying to imitate the dismembered

The bastard offspring of Finkel and Perkins returned. Annoyed, Thorn asked to hear the charms of "Pack One."

Finally the self-proclaimed "coolest band the Universe," God appeared. Presumably the "Lads" were wild. God gave both of the requirements needed to ensure a strong following: They are from Leeds and are essentially ordinary. As with the majority of "wacky" bands they have limited appeal and the joke soon wears thin. I mean this one for charity... our phone bill, scored a little louder perhaps? Well there was at least one time per song occasionally it was a good one. Like the quirky "Last power in Nigby". An everyday tale of Nigger in a Chinese tale song! Musically they belied their reputation for sloppiness and were actually quite competent though each member of the band had a different idea on when to end each song.

Really though I can't see God progressing beyond their once a term appearance at the Duchess of York, but as long as they don't mind I know their lot won't.

exploited them. The play, a historical parallel written at the height of the McCarthy purge, can often be giggled at, totally misinterpreted and therefore totally destroyed. Luckily, the Theatre Group's performance didn't produce many giggles, and managed to get across the serious message Miller was trying to convey.

Pinpointing performances was hard to do, but I can't fail to mention Heloise Pumphrey's portrayal of Abigail Williams – sweet, sexy, evil and enigmatic all in one – or Jenny Harvey's Elizabeth Proctor – morally based but strength-

Likewise, Stone Hall's direction could not go amiss. The setting, costumes and action fitted the era perfectly, both literally and figuratively.

The Granada, in my humble opinion, could not be bettered. It was well staged, well produced and well acted, and what's more well worth going to see.

VOODOO ROY

Ray Davies's new album, Mystery Girl, is very good. That might sound a trifle blunt but for anyone who has waded through the codeworded, downy water, it will be a refreshing affirmation of the factual.

[illegible][illegible]

Probably the best thing about this record is the fact that it was not a mainstream plundering of the Chisholm family archive. By completing the album a heritage board has not only dignified such a record but has also released answers. Unlike Tomlinson, whose memory was defined by the silence of the speaking, they know almost as his pain stirred up in him. Ray Chisholm's talent as a singer who will be fondly remembered has certainly been enhanced by this record.

Sigourney Weaver's latest film, GORILLAS IN THE MIST sounds more than a trifle sappy. DAMIAN WHITWORTH thinks otherwise.

Michael Apted's view of Mountain Gorillas is quite simple: they "Eat, fuck and eat." One might be quite justified, then, in coolly raising a questioning eyebrow at the thought of what he might be about to do in a major two-hour film about these massive primates. However, this true story of the life, obsession with gorillas and eventual murder of anthropologist Dian Fossey, is more than a glorified night out with David Attenborough's custody theme.

The stronger feature of the film is the performance of Sigourney. I isn't afraid of no ghost! Weaver as an extraordinary woman who sacrifices her comfortable life and home to save the African gorillas from extinction. Of course, it all sounds very idealistic, but the development of her commitment is convincing and Fossey is a full and original character. For moments she wears plastic witch masks and betrays local people.

Unfortunately, it is easy to see why she rejects a love affair with Bryan Brown, an African photographer, in favour of gorillas. Bryan Brown is less impressive than the many pile of gorilla evidence that spends his late vapours in an early scene.

In the closing stages there is genuine tension as Fossey battles desperately with poachers. This is due partly to the affinity with the gorillas that Apted has established by the superb close encounter sequences. Many are not people in suits and poorly equipped of the video gear that Weaver finds as Fossey's remaining rationality departs for some place far, far away. Certainly the sum of the film's goals is not merely resistance, reproduction and ingenuity.

GORILLA WARFARE

NEW ORDER released their first batch of new material in three acts, on Monday — TECHNIQUE. BREX HARRISON puts on a Pet Shop Boys record and thinks about

In Britain you have New Order. Well this is the New Disorder...

Thus speaks Kevin Saunderson of City, speaking of the burgeoning new sound of Detroit of which he is one of the prime movers.

In connection between Kraftwerk and SOAF's third European proto-dance sounds — making synthesizer dance for the first time and revealing its intrinsic automatic funkiness — and their first antecedents on the US dance floor are documented.

At midnight New Order have been overbooked in the making of electronic body music's age during the nightclubs. While the music grows up increasingly redundant superlatives their 5,000 average live parties still seem to elude some filmic action along the lines: "It's like a wild-with-head-singer-goes-disco."

It's like we take New Order too much for granted, but throughout Europe and the States — the Joy Division means little if anything — they're the blueprint and the vector of dance life's future for years.

'Technique' is where New Order reverse the 8 and collect. While the UK went totally 'Crescent' during the summer, the popular saw play into Chicago and New York's more outlaw as rarely before, New Order were held up in an Illinois studio consciously assimilating the same conventions of house for the first time.

Now between the impossible limits of extended invention and ingenuity on 'Technique' and the dark, half-finished 'Brotherhood' there exists just one common thread, and it is that in the end New Order just want to get up your nose. Especially if you are a Fan.

They will put the sound of mating frogs on a dance record and jarring Hammond organs on a melancholy guitar thing, they will down their brightest, faintest singles up like postcards from the edge of the Great Salt Flashed Basin and they will play entire shows within a globe of dry ice and never speak a word.

Set up until this fifth album proper they have never deliberately stepped into the market, building the business of the day into their meticulous showpieces of unrecognised normal machine code. In this case it's not so much a capitulation as a brave move of sorts: 'Technique' reflects a decade's work of disco craft through the prism of New Order's unique collective imagination, making the stupid clever and the old new. Where The Pet Shop Boys offer the dancefloor dream in a clean capsule of air, New Order head it and shape it into blinding new possibilities.

In 1978, Mr Tomorrow himself Gary Numan and later the assured charlatan of New Romanticism painted the nightclubs in austere monochrome; trust the reformed barstards from Manchester, the long reinvented merchants with the loving bass and the latest hit drama, to respray them in Technicolor.

ROOTS AND THE ROOTS

The Guardian Angels Of The Grooves
Honey Bee Records

Review by Tom Edge

Best... If you want to be introduced to the next step in musical direction then look elsewhere. Roots and Co. do not practice hip soul music or attempt to tackle life's little problems in a three minute song. Instead, reliable funk, with a hint of rock, sells the Roots package.

Frontman and composer extraordinaire Miles Gilchrist leads the songs together in the way James Brown might have done before he got rich. Side three kicks off with five of the band's best known grooves, interrupted in part only by the tremulous "This Heart" which seems to be a tribute to a spin but from then on it's purely a shaker (even though it's called "Little Light" and "Groove Thing" certainly do not create clever lyrics and the arrangements, imaginative though they are, aren't going to make Phil Collins drop his gravelly dramatics but these aren't the bands idea. It may grate in its slow moments and is somewhat cutesy but it is well crafted and does have the appeal or danceability and sense of fun.

At the end of the day, Roots make their friends by their gifts and not by their viral appearances, probably due to a lack of air play. To their credit they have talent, a large following and based current reputation but this is not the album to send them into any gallop chart. Go and use one of their gifts and decide for yourself.

An Ideal Husband by Oscar Wilde
Grand Theatre

Review by Debbie Lee

Unlike other Wilde plays which formulate into short, quick and sharp commentaries An Ideal Husband concentrated on character building and role playing, which was more than likely what made the first two acts somewhat brightly and slowly paced. Set in the Victorian Age of staunch morality, sense of duty and hypocrisy the play found its action around a Mrs. Cheever. Heavily involved in a foreign diplomatic deal, of which she is expert, she deals the dirty and attempts to blackmail Sir Robert Chiltern, a prominent Member of Parliament.

As the play progressed the performances became tighter and the creating action became an integral part of the first half. Some of the characters notably Lord Goring (Jeremy Simons, son of Donald) and Lady Blount, are gifted with Wilde's distinctive witty, philosophical and social repartee. The production was a good one, with a lovely set and period costume. Just the right atmosphere for such irrelevant banality. The witty lines, very observations and quips made the battle between the sexes curiously enjoyable. Some of the performances were memorable, some flat or melodramatic but whatever there was definitely a serious intent to entertain.

The spirit of 'Headgape', like all of the 'Throwing Stones' work, is essentially sublimine. In a sense, spelling mix of sounds, like a 'housewife' style drum, notes live. The three previous LPs have got steadily denser, culminating in last year's 'Housewife' that defied us to take the human psyche there was a worry that Words could never recover. The slush of styles, songs, slurring from quick country beats into spaced out funk, and towards almost unrecognisable, almost beyond comprehension. There was no further place for the Meters to go, except back up, out of the dark and towards the stars.

'Headgape' is the nearest thing to pop that you are ever likely to hear coming from this particular house envelope. The new single, 'Daisy', is an astonishing explosion of tones and timbres, grabbing the attention with tiny hooks and dragging the listener into a confusing dream world, where events pile in upon each other, providing catastrophe and collapse. True to form, Words — and guitarist Donally on the stylish member of 'Duganhead' and 'Angel' ("the found herself in bed absolutely romantic and we look for something warmer") — play with dreams, surreal tips in and out of the unconscious. 'Headgape' sets out to pull apart stereotyped images of masculinity, it's intended to be serious (rather than just whoring) I would talk about a living into the Otherness of Kristian's passion, and acceptance of the loneliness in the tradition, the dark. I want to be there too people, I want to be there too...

It might be a fitting towards pop, but that only serves to make them stranger, more extreme. In as good as it should have been, they haven't disappointed me yet.

JANES ADDICTION AND DRUG FREE AMERICA live at the Warehouse. Review by Vic

Controlling the microphone stand like a stamp and energetic Elton John, Wolf rolls around the stage, bringing back feelings of viral across the beach of the audience. The studio reflect the album of the crowd. Wolf looks confident, super confident. Floating in and out of the smoke that flows from the top of the stage. He could be playing anywhere from Mothers' Square Garden to Las Vegas.

The beats are FUDGE, the guitars electric, a reworking of 'There a race shape' hints across the arena, the soul becomes then before. Drug Free America have developed far beyond their last output. The drums are the same of an anticipation than the repeated beat, the samples are coming more more in the here, if they were the level of the guitar notes they would reach towards the show, quickly, quickly, moments of New Beat, but they have difficulty in holding the steel idea of 'Heaven', turning it from a self effective towards little into of an unexpected antique equal. They are all too involved with the spirit of entertainment, all having a good of being rock a roll animals to look for the spot.

They tap into the blood then, tapping the rhythm of heart, heart, heart, heart, turning it into a their own. They have themselves in, as to the philosophy and style make words. Their addition is harder than Jane's life.

The top 1.5 band of the moment promised everything and delivered nothing. Their last comment was the spirit of 'Thank You Rose', but after that day, it all dissolved into a mess of guitar wailed within set more music. They play the most notions of songs. Their supporters are Karpis, not Spitz, mention Hendrix, Tompkins they cover the. Sooner meeting. Thinking friends, I have nothing against them, I like it even. But this is not good to play anything more than loud rock. Peter Lawlor jumps around the stage, out of his skin, not a soul, but his enthusiastic work, like animals in live performance, isn't even a lasting tradition of others.

In making "Dead Ringers," David Cronenberg has abandoned the largely superficial schlock exploitation of "The Fly" and attempted his most disturbing offering since "Videodrome," writes Adam Blythe. Indeed, you'll be unlikely to see anything more physically harrowing this side of the "Snuff" video market. The film centres on Elliot and Beverly Mantle (Jeremy Irons), inseparable identical twins whose bizarre childhood intercession with reproductive anatomy leads them to make their joint career in gynaecology. Cronenberg explores the strange links between the twins on the basis of their existence — their lifetime of shared emotional and physical experience — is undermined by their relationship with a captivating actress (Genevieve Bujard).

Although the philosopher Elliot is happy to discover and play with her, Beverly's discovery that he has fallen in love for the first time, and the two-brother relationship becomes increasingly and deeply acidic as the deep bonds that even these are stretched and broken.

Unfortunately, although the ideas presented in "Dead Ringers" are interesting in the abstract, it simply does not work as a film. This is largely because Cronenberg attempts to intellectually engage the audience whilst simultaneously asking if it can cope with the icy cold concept of "The Gynaecological Horror Movie." In the end, the viewer's mind is completely emptied by the totally disgusting gross-out misogynist implications of what two men, much closer gynaecologists can do when they realise that all women are inevitably just potential victims. The film is composed under waves of nausea and revulsion.

Despite their marvellous handling of the task of playing two entirely different personalities simultaneously, the film ultimately leaves a (backwash of horrific) confusion in the mind. "Dead Ringers" is a masterpiece of clinical violence and measured thought as it best difficult to combine in an appropriate film. When the film makes "Hollywood" — call culture just acceptable. Having relatively avoided the mainstream market, Cronenberg is merely to divide who he's trying to appeal to and get his priorities right.

MORRISSET — THE LAST OF THE FAMOUS INTERNATIONAL PLAYBOYS (NME)

At last the new Morisset single, which in a particularly nice week for singles wipes the floor with the rest. Stephen Street has again come up with an devastatingly catchy tune and an irresistible chorus as Morisset continues to convince his fans in a time and the time he dwells upon the notorious Kray twins in particular. Despite the presence of all of the Smiths bar Johnny Marr, who is now one of the Best (in) Connections, this is more Morisset than the Smiths which can only be a good thing.

THE RADIATORS — UNDER CURRY'S CLOCK (Chiswick)

The Radiators featuring Poppy Philip-Chewer have performed especially to record this "gay love song". Admable sentiments indeed, particularly in these post-Corn 20 days, but apart from the "Do I like Alan" lines this record sounds awfully like the original, bland and utterly rubbish AOR that Chris de Burgh gets his act.

PEACH CHOCOLATE — DREAM KITCHEN (Virgin)

Virgin's newest contribution to the ever expanding list of pop group aimed at the yuppie, CD-owning audience. An understated slow pop song which is made by the notes, but it comes close to being wrecked by the soft subject matter. It sounds like an MP3 advert. It could well be a hit but it isn't expected there. It's like a slow, dreamy, distant underperformance along with their under-rated instrumental The Big Day.

BRYAN FERRY — THE PRICE OF LOVE (RCA)

After the 8-8-8 EP remix (10) Ferry comes with shamelessly trying to play old Bryan music material under his own name by releasing compilation extra compilation. It's now having his older material remixed as in the current version. "Oh well I hear you say 'What monster classic Ferry track ruined by remaking it.' No not really... this was crap originally.

POP WILL EAT ITSELF — CAN U DIG IT? (RCA)

The Popstars new track on popstar after is quite "88" with their first single on a major label, RCA. Unfortunately this isn't the big old hit of popstar it's supposed to be. "Can U Dig It?" is a good song, but it's not going to sell anyone about it. "Alan Moore's known the name" — crap lyric of the year and it's only thirty days old.

THE SUNDAYS — CAN'T BE SURE (Rough Trade)

The cover says "SUNDAYS" looking in a painting shows a to Tom Jones the record doesn't.

WINDY AND LISA — ARE YOU MY BABY? (Virgin)

Two co-members of the Revolution do their best to sound like the right royal purple one, right down to the woolsy eyes. But up and according to the Prince with no money and no talent. No great surprise really is it.

SINGLES SUPPLIED BY CRASH RECORDS

BACK TO THE SUTURE

Tim Whitwell went to see Martin Stephenson at City Varieties. This is what he brought back.

Martin Stephenson is one cool Yogi who plays and writes music better than the coverage here. This really is enough. I don't want to set up one of those about-faced, the ghost in the machine and so on. It's like it's difficult enough to listen to without having to write about it using pompous jerk-off adjectives and adverbs. Mr Stephenson is not into heavy rock guitar solos or symphonies, so it should be fairly easy to write out what he is about. If not, simply lay one of his albums.

Yet for anyone who might find this a little sour for their palate, here is what the gig contained: an extremely good violin player, a versatile young man who looked like a Frodinator but was able to play both the sax and one drum, Gypsy-Dave Smith, and a bass guitar. All three together for perfect results. Our Martin also decided not to water a bit, which disappointed the many inattentive in the audience. The only thing left to ask is why on earth George Fergie hasn't achieved the massive success he deserves? Perhaps he is better left in comfortable cult figure for all us middle of the road coffee drinkers; a horrific thought indeed.

Smash and Crash Home Selections

BIG FISH FORD TRO (Majestic King Records)

BIG FISH FORD IS END ON ACID SHOGG!!

Well that's what they tell us even if it does echo of a big fat white cow. Apparently Peter "Baker" Ford is the creator of "Ambient House" whose the best of Sals and Yagis warbles after a house beat.

Ford claims that each track represents a different mood or occasion. "Crash" is for when you are on an airplane that takes off that one Ford, "Fordone" is for taking about in your own personal environment, "Baker" is for sitting on a chair, "Crash" back watching the sunset and "New York" is for standing in a tree, playing a flute, standing at the Big Apple that is at least there when he went.

Unfortunately Ford seems to have missed the obvious in that there isn't a track for laying about in a nightclub. Tell a lie, there is the old favorite "Daddy Koolha" (only missing on the title — "Daddy Koolha" is an even more for the first personal mix that the original which was inspired by a similar smash old Fordy cut made when it was at one stage — more annoying than ambient.

Remember all this ambient house rule book. This album is a nice title it track choice. All "acid" tracks with a strong influence from Fingers Inc. Not as abstract as one would have hoped from "Daddy Koolha" but not as apologetic as "Daddy Koolha" is.

Anyway, I've got the tube, now if I can just find a tree I can see New York too...

CONCRETE DANCE BAND For The World

— mix a little bit of acid. Big One Records

Don't let the mention of "acid" and you off — this is the freshest thing since Todd Terry first magicked his dream machines as an act name.

London's British origins stick out like a sore thumb when it comes to the record. By passing the name they every three seconds for eight minutes with humor and energy that is missing from more often produced conscious affairs. Laughably inspiring samples are jammed into rhythms that stretch to the limits, occasionally slipping out at times, leaving a lot of a giggle and then diving back in to basically re-emerge itself before you know what's happened.

Longer's complete disregard for the current trend to over-classify dance music manifests itself in his insanely genius choice of samples to set against it over present withering acid synth. Furthermore, pop already alongside mainstream style big band and a Western to Sals party. Gosh! It's down smash places in far forward to "Get tight a DJ saved my life" sample.

Understandably the real master on this album is "This is Sals" — featured in two mixes (Sals and Todd) which creates a familiar who often into a fully blown out house rhythm — a completely inevitable dancefloor filler that certainly turns all acid dancers open palms into throw up stars.

In the words of Barbara Windsor who is the last sample on the album: "This quote made you know, but then we all are..."

Barrelling down to the Islamabad for "a curry" after the paleo diet is all well and good if you sense of taste is a blunt instrument. But in the home of every student cook whose Rogan Josh is worth its rumble in a copy of the homer's bible, Madhur Jaffrey's Indian Cookery.

Now the renowned actress and culinary expert has embarked on another foray into eating habits unfamiliar to the culture English with Madhur Jaffrey's Far Eastern Cookery on BBC2. Confirmed disciple Andrew Harrison met the great woman in Amstels Bookshop on her tour to plug the book and series. He came away looking for Leningrad. In Leids? Come of it...

It sounds a bit trite but Madhur Jaffrey changed my life. Not to any great degree, you understand: just enough to open me up (and) and into the mysteries of Indian cuisine with her essential guide to proper Indian food.

Named after the TV series of the same name, Madhur Jaffrey's Indian Cookery goes thousands of generations as well as the modern like me can find crack in real Indian cookery. But it's been a start, and Madhur is quite convinced that it made a major contribution to changing our eating habits in this country.

It hasn't made me into a culinary genius — I never could get the spices right, all my Gourmet stuff is a bit too vinegary and I still can't get the hang of the real Indian nation. But it's been a start, and Madhur is quite convinced that it made a major contribution to changing our eating habits in this country.

"Spices from supermarkets lose it out quite clearly," she tells me.

"After the series was first broadcast in the early eighties, the market for spices has changed. Sautéed Indian foods, and the genuine ingredients to prepare meals as we showed them on television, have gone up, and that's what is going to happen now with the Far Eastern cookery series."

"Like the dishes we showed in the Indian cookery series, the new series shows very healthy cooking, in that you lose a lot of the fat content in meats. And it's easy to do — everything you know now you can use in Chinese and Vietnamese cookery."

As Britain sits at the centre of an ever-growing global communication net, we hear lots of talk about how British traditions will be swamped by influences from abroad — America TV, French wine, Australian soap-pop stars and music from

WOK THE HOUSE!

Following in the culinary wake of the inimitable Madhur Jaffrey, Chen's 'Garlic Bag' Dorian debuts into the mysteries of Indian cookery in order to bring you a welcome alternative to the Saturday night "Indian-style after-the-party-of-the-night".

ROGAN JOSH

Rogan Josh is a rich and subtle dish of lamb and meat, not your average late night pub-house concoction. Like most Indian dishes of you want to do it properly it will take a fair amount of time and a lot of effort. So if you're prepared to spend the time, here's how...

Ingredients: 1 onion, peeled and sliced; 4 tbsp oil; 4 green cardamoms; 4 large cardamoms; 8 cloves; 2 bay leaves; 1 inch cinnamon stick; 1 inch root ginger, crushed; 2 cloves garlic, crushed; 1 lb boned lamb; 2 tsp ground coriander; 2 tsp chilli powder; 2 tsp paprika powder; 1 tsp ground cardamom; 1 tsp natural yogurt; 1 tsp salt; 1 tsp cumin; 1 tsp coriander; 1 tsp ground coriander; 12 if no water; 1 pinch saffron.

Pre-heat and lightly browned (like your mother did) and then fry the cardamoms, cloves, bay leaves and cinnamon for about a minute. Add ginger and garlic paste, oil and add meat. Sprinkle oil, use at a time, cumin, chili, paprika and coriander powder, and fry the mixture for a further 2 minutes. Add yogurt and salt, cover, and cook for 5-7 minutes until dry. At this point add almonds and poppyseeds, stir fry for 2 minutes and then add water.

Cover and gently simmer for 40-50 minutes until meat is tender and the mixture is fairly dry. Sprinkle with saffron and cook for a further 3 minutes, taking care not to burn the oil. (I've never heard the meat. Finally, stir in the saffron and your Rogan Josh is ready to eat. By this stage the dish should be fairly dry, with moist spots around the meat.

Serve with rice or raiti bread according to taste.

KHATA-MEETHA KADDU

Khata-Meetha Kadu is a sweet and sour dish of potato and pumpkin which takes very little time to prepare or cook, but is nevertheless a delicious vegetarian curry.

Ingredients: 2 tbsp oil; 1 inch cinnamon stick; 8 green cardamoms; 8 cloves; 1 tsp five spice mixture (garam masala); 2 medium potatoes, peeled and cut into chunks; 100 pumpkin, peeled and cut into chunks; 1 tsp chilli powder; 1 tsp ground coriander; 4 tsp tomato powder; 2 tsp salt; 2 tsp sugar; 1 tbsp tamarind pulp; 3 tbsp water.

Heat oil and add bay leaf, cinnamon, cardamom, cloves and five spice mixture and fry for a minute or less. Add potatoes and fry for four minutes, then add pumpkin. Stir vegetables and cook for three minutes. Sprinkle with chilli powder, coriander, tamarind, salt and sugar. Stir the mixture to blend the spices, and add tamarind pulp and water. All of this needs to be everywhere from Bali to Brooklyn.

It may not be very patriotic but as far as I'm concerned the sooner the dead end of English cooking is buried the better. And Madhur agrees to an extent that it's happening now.

"I live just lamb and beef, everyone does," she says.

"But it is still becoming very much an occasion thing. People will eat more grains and more vegetables, the emphasis will shift to dishes with less meat than more vegetables. When you use the Far Eastern Cookery book you will look at the way of preparing foods with only a little meat."

"(And the British are already becoming addicted to spices, I think the Far Eastern spices like lemongrass are going to be so popular."

Lemongrass? Never heard of it. You can't get that from Kiriya market.

"Well you don't find these spices at supermarkets but you will find them at Indian supermarkets like in fresh, and you can get it dried lemongrass in Manchester. Ask for it and you'll get it."

Secondly, but when most people think of Far Eastern food they think of rice and meat, and you can get a packet of frozen chicken from the Chinese down the road. What are we missing out on?

"The series has been as much a voyage of discovery for me as anyone else," Madhur says. "Each country has its own traditions."

The Philippines has a great Spanish element to its cuisine, Spanish-themed dishes in a very modern style, with olives, peppers, onions, tomatoes...

"Japanese cooking is much more subtle, wonderful fish and rice dishes. Chinese cooking you'll know — lots of rice, mostly meats and vegetables but no salad and no oil, mostly everything is cooked, even if it's slightly."

"As to Korean food — there's lots of beef because the country is very wealthy, but the still eat a lot of pickling, chili and they also have very special pickles made in kimchi or in bagu pickles."

"The Vietnamese specialty is wonderful for pickled packages which you make years sometimes out of lemon. You put in a little mix of fresh herbs and you have a dipping sauce with lots of lime in it."

Enough! I can't stand it any longer. I must go to that lovely lime-juice cooked mackerel mentioned. And of course to find some lemon grass...

done under close supervision, so not to be tempted while watching Neighbours. Cover and heat gently 3-10 minutes until the potatoes are tender. This is a moist curry without gravy. Serve with either rice or bread.

NAN BREAD

The actual taste of nan comes from baking the bread in a clay chamber called. However you can still achieve quite good results in the traditional Handley by "baking" gas version.

Ingredients: 2 tsp yeast; 1 tsp sugar; 1 1/2 tsp fine bicarbonate of soda; water; 1 tsp aniseed or more seeds; 1/2 tsp refined plain flour; pinch of salt; 1 aniseed (optional); 2/3 aniseed (optional).

Mix yeast and sugar and add 1 tsp tepid water. When mixture becomes frothy (it is hard to see a pin) Turkey oil flour and salt and add bicarbonate of soda. Mix well and add melted butter, yogurt and yeast mixture. Knead with sufficient water to give a moist dough. Cover and leave to rise for 2-3 hours in a warm place (under cupboard, bottom of your bed, end of a Sunday Sport, etc.) Knead again and make it about ten balls. Roll each ball into an elongated 8 bread about 8 x 10 cm on a lightly floured surface. It does not mean your window head. Coat with butter. Sprinkle with a few anise or anise seeds. Bake in oven, preheated to Gas Mark 6 (200°C or 400°F) 5-6 minutes. Serve hot.
